ve sc

DARWIN, Sat.—An Aboriginal legal challenge to the $300 million Gove bauxite alumina project will halt work on the scheme, experts believe.

Mining and pastoral interests believe the challenge will also affect interests prospects in Worth Americal Plans have been drawn up for what will be Australia. vestment prospects North Australia.

North Australia.

In Darwin today Aboriginal civil rights leader Mr. Phillip Roberts, a medical assistant with the health department, came out squarely behind the Gove tribe's action against the Commonwealth Government and the Nabalco Mining Company, the company behind the Govescheme.

Jeopardy

Jeopardy

In doing so the 44-yearold father of eight daughters believes he is placing in jeopardy his application for a $5500-a-year jobwith the Aboriginal Affairs Department in Canberra.
The speculation follows
the issuing of writs yesterday by three tribalised
Aborigines for unspecified
Aborigines for unspecified damages and seeking a restraining order and a Supreme Court order confirming Aboriginal land rights on areas of the Arnhem Land Reserve.
The hearing is unlikely to take place before early

to take place before early next year.

The land is known to be the richest bauxite deposit in the world and a huge international conhuge international con-sortium with 70 percent had killed many invading

Plans have been drawn up for what will be Australia's most modern township on the northeast tip of Arnhem Land.

The Methodist Overseas Mission, which has for years run Yirrkala Mis-sion at Gove, is behind the Aborigines move.

In Melbourne yester-day, the Rev. A. F. Elle-mor launched an Aus-tralia-wide appeal for funds to meet the legal costs of the action.

Like all missions in the Territory, MOM is heavily subsidised in all its operations here.

Prime Minister Gorton announced last week that when the Gove project is operating fully, the Northern Territory Aborigines Mineral Royalties Trust Fund will benefit by almost $1 million a year.

About $250,000 in royalties is now paid into the trust fund by Broken Hill Proprietary Limited from its manganese operations at Groote Eylandt, not far from Gave from Gove.

Mr. Roberts said the over people were very Gove proud and determined.

"They are fighters, and now they are fighting the white man way in court," Mr. Roberts said.